1. Context

The International Organization for Migration (IOM) works in close partnership with Libyan authorities to enhance their capacity to respond to the challenges related to migration management. IOM takes up the role of promoting the orderly and humane management of migration, promoting international cooperation on migration issues, supporting relevant actors to govern migration flows and effectively maximize their positive impacts while minimizing the potential costs on migrants and society, as well as providing humanitarian assistance to migrants in need.

In the quest for better lives and opportunities, thousands of migrants each year continue to make the treacherous trip across the Mediterranean, a journey that has continued to claim the lives of many migrants, led to life-threatening injuries, and traumatized many survivors.

Libyan authorities engaged in rescue operations face constant challenges in every rescue operation especially when it comes to saving lives. Bad weather, poor equipment and overloaded boats cause shipwrecks that result in the drowning of migrants. The appropriate and timely use of life-saving equipment is crucial for saving lives. The personal safety of the rescuer is essential too as it comes first, including the ability to perform in and under water. Therefore, diving and maritime safety training courses are essential elements for the Libyan authorities to strengthen their search and rescue capabilities.
